Dynamics of plasmonic phase plates for super-resolution imaging. We present a dynamic plasmonic phase plate to control the phase of surface plasmon polaritons on a smooth surface and an optical mask surface. We describe a modulated optical mask that allows a super-resolution phase contrast image to be reconstructed using iterative algorithms. The dynamic phase-plate can be used to manipulate and create holographic complex images on smooth surfaces and mask surfaces, as well as to create super-resolution imaging and super-resolution imaging with an optical mask.

Balsalm Balsalm

is a village and civil parish in the county of Somerset, England, situated in the South Somerset region, east of Chard. History The village name means 'balsam grove' and was the ancient seat of the manor of Scamblesham and the Scamblesham Hundred. The village was recorded in the Domesday Book as Balsam, when it was held by Earl Godwin from Robert, son of Gospatric. It was part of the manor of Chewton Mendip. In 1885 the parish was combined with Scamblesham to form a single parish. Landmarks Church of St John the Baptist, Balsalm is a Grade I listed building. The oldest parts of the church are 13th century, and the chancel has a 14th century painting of Christ surrounded by angels. The church is next to Balsalm House, 2d92ce491b
