North Korean leader Kim Jong-un has offered to "sit down" for face-to-face talks with President Donald Trump, according to a senior South Korean government official. North Korea "said they have prepared their side of the table and have shown a willingness to meet for negotiations," the official told Reuters on Thursday. "There was a request by President Trump to meet Kim Jong Un and this was given to Secretary of State Mike Pompeo," the official said, adding that North Korea's offer followed Trump's "very direct request" to meet Kim and that North Korea had asked for "flexibility" in arranging a meeting. South Korea's acting President and government chief, Hwang Kyo-ahn, expressed a positive attitude toward the proposal, the official said. "We will consider what kind of meeting the United States is prepared to have with North Korea. We would like to pursue the negotiations based on the principle of 'trust and dialogue' and in a way that does not give any concessions to the North," Hwang said.
