Want to get involved in the Startup America Partnership, which is helping small businesses grow and create jobs in the U.S.? Startup America is a nonprofit organization that was set up in 2011 by the White House to help close the gap between the innovation and entrepreneur ecosystems. A lot of the communities that are most fertile for growth are places where the jobs are not available and where young people aren't being engaged. We have a number of partnerships with companies like Microsoft, Intel, and others who are looking at ways to change the future of American entrepreneurship. One of the things that we're looking at is how do we get more people from minority and underserved communities into entrepreneurship. What are the best practices that we're doing to get more people involved? What are the areas of entrepreneurship where you think the most growth and innovation is happening today? It depends on what areas you're interested in. I'd love to see more innovation in everything, but we need to make sure that we're not leaving people behind in the innovation that's happening and make sure that we have a diverse workforce that is inclusive. Are you looking for a job? I am, but I'm trying to figure out how I'm going to move forward and the direction that I want to go. In addition to that, I'm trying to spend some time going to a lot of universities and getting involved in the startup community there. I've been doing that for the last three or four months. 2d92ce491b
