I was playing my Xbox 360 yesterday and noticed the thing was vibrating around the middle. So I took it apart and found out the red wire wasn't connected to the frame. That's not it, it's the leftmost wire on the bottom left of the switch. I'm going to switch out the switch tonight, and hope that solves it. I have done that before with other wireless headsets and it fixed it. Either way it's not a huge deal. I'll take my controller apart tonight and see if I find anything, and I will let you know what happens. I don't like the wired headset, but I guess it's the most compatible. Hopefully I'll get something else that will fit me. Quick note on the noise canceling, I know it's in the top, but I was really looking forward to using it. It has been terrible, and loud when using it. My neighbors are both ears will be covered by it, and they have both been on the phone or watching TV for the last two days. Now they have been quiet all day and I've been able to do whatever I wanted (and it's been cool outside!)William Lowther (disambiguation) William Lowther (1593–1628) was an English admiral.
