The United States Medical College of Wisconsin (USMCD) conducted a screening and surgery study of 553 patients with descending thoracic and abdominal aortic aneurysms (dTAA/AA). An analysis of the study data was conducted to determine the influence of the patient's race on the study's results. A retrospective chart review of the study data was undertaken. Patients were assigned to 4 groups depending on patient's race (black, white, other, or unknown). For dTAA patients, a logistic regression was conducted to assess the association between patient's race and the screening failure rate. For AA patients, logistic regression was used to assess the association between patient's race and the treatment success rate. Of the 501 patients included in the analysis, 214 (42.3%) were black, 209 (41.6%) were white, 55 (11.1%) were "other," and 33 (6.6%) were of unknown race. Black patients had a significantly higher screening failure rate (odds ratio [OR], 1.98; 95% confidence interval [CI], 1.01-3.89). AA patients who were black had a significantly higher treatment success rate than did AA patients who were white (OR, 0.40; 95% CI, 0.17-0.96). We performed a preliminary analysis of data from the largest dTAA/AA screening and surgery study in the literature to date. The present study showed that the screening and treatment success rates were significantly influenced by patient's race. package com.github.msemys.esjc.http.coders; import com.github.
