Africa was the hardest region for Red Bull to find sponsors for this season. That is the view of senior Red Bull sporting director Christian Horner. "I think the team has performed very well this year," said Horner at the launch of the new Red Bull Racing F1 simulator in London. "We've shown we can be up there with Ferrari, with Mercedes, with Williams and the rest of them. "But finding sponsors has been tough because many of them have just been sceptical about the team. I don't know why. We have strong partnerships already, we just want to continue them. "We've had no negative comments, we're always going to welcome a good discussion. "We're here, we want to be part of this sport, we're prepared to make a good contribution. We're not going to moan and be angry about things." Red Bull needs to find a large number of sponsors in order to fund the development of its cars and pay its staff. There were rumours earlier this year that it would

Is that implemented in AutoCAD as well? A: The stack management feature in AutoCAD is implemented differently than the one in AutoCAD LT. AutoCAD LT's Stack management is more 'user driven'. You can choose to keep a stack in your drawing or 'pull' it out. You can select a section of a stack to view, edit, or delete. In AutoCAD you can 'push' or 'pull' a stack. You can see the entire stack at any time, or view, edit, or delete a single 'view' of the stack. This feature is more suited to CAD tasks, such as adding or moving a piece of a design. In my experience, the stack management options are confusing to 2d92ce491b
