SUDBURY - There's an offer that would take Nova Scotia's carbon tax rebate to $0. The offer — that could give you $5,000 cash — is on the table at Tim Hortons in Sarnia. The chain of doughnut shops said it is offering the rebate in response to a provincial government campaign encouraging Nova Scotia residents to apply for the tax cut. "To date, over 100 people have called our store and applied for the rebate, and it's clear we have struck a chord," said a tweet from Sarnia's Tim Hortons. Sarnia, in the province's east, is about an hour and a half's drive from Halifax. To receive the rebate, a person would have to apply online before Nov. 30. The rebate is targeted to people with incomes less than $80,000. The rebate can be applied toward eligible heating or electricity costs. It comes on top of an existing rebate. When the carbon tax was introduced in Nova Scotia in 2018, it was pegged to inflation with no rebate. It replaced the former Tory government's unpopular carbon levy, which applied to most heating and electricity costs.

1. Technical Field The present invention relates to a rubber composition used in applications where an elastomer is required to have good oil resistance and to a tire using the rubber composition. 2. Related Art There has been used a rubber composition composed of a natural rubber, a synthetic rubber such as styrene-butadiene copolymer rubber (SBR), and carbon black and a polychloroprene in a rubber component. Also, there have been proposed a method of using a sulfonate polymer as a rubber component of a rubber composition, and a method of using polychloroprene having an end group which can be reacted with a sulfur compound, and a rubber composition using these methods. In particular, the rubber composition is used for a tire tread. However, in a tire using the rubber composition, there has been caused a problem that the tire has poor air permeability. In order to improve the air permeability, there has been proposed a method of using a silica, a calcium carbon
