Before we can evaluate your repair or service needs, we need to review any prior automotive repair or service work you've had done. If you have had any repair work done in the past with other auto repair shops, we will need to review their records, as well. The old repair records enable us to better understand what work we have to do, how much it will cost, and when it will be completed. We'll need to review your current vehicle's maintenance record, too. The maintenance record enables us to identify any unexpected problems or potential leaks that may be impacting your vehicle. It will help us decide if your vehicle requires servicing or further repair, and if so, what work should be done. Our goal is to keep your vehicle healthy and running at its optimal performance for as long as possible. To enable us to keep that goal in mind, you can expect that we will perform all of the following repair and service work on your vehicle:Q: Calculate and apply a decimal amount in an SQL statement I need to write a SQL statement that reads the value of a field called X from the table, and then sums the corresponding values of two other fields and applies a decimal amount to that

I'm building a project on a docker container, the problem is I have a ssh_config file in my project, and I need to check if a given key already authorized or not to build the container. I use the dockerfile to build the container, I have a step to check if the key is valid: RUN ssh-keyscan -H github.com >> /dev/null 2>&1 Which seems to check if the key is not yet valid (because it's not in the output). When I copy-paste this to a.sh file it seems to work. So how do I check if a key is valid in a ssh config file? A: Your definition of valid will be either either the RSA or DSA key fingerprint or the name. So for RSA just use echo ${your_rsa_key_name} | cut -d "@" -f3 The cut command is looking for the @ symbol which is the separator between the string's section and the key's fingerprint section in the DNSKEY Resource record. So basically it's converting a DNSKEY field to an empty string and the -f3 then removes the name part Our website uses cookies to improve your user experience. Other Notes: Reduced expression of tumor suppressor gene LKB1 results in gastric cancer development. The LKB1 gene encodes a putative serine/threonine kinase that plays a critical role in the regulation of cell polarity and the establishment of cell polarity. A gastric carcinoma (GC)-prone strain of LKB1-/- mice and the related WT mice were treated with N-methyl-N'-nitro-N-nitrosoguanidine (MNNG). The histological types and clinical stages of GC
