Does distance to the emergency department influence transport times of children and adolescents presenting with abdominal pain? Children with abdominal pain (CAP) are often transported to the emergency department (ED), which may lead to long total time spent in the ED, higher resource utilization, and increasing ED crowding. This study sought to investigate whether distance to the closest ED in Ontario, Canada, influences the times spent in the ED, total ED time, and total length of stay (LOS) for children and adolescents with CAP. A retrospective study was performed using linked provincial health care databases. This study included children and adolescents aged 1-18 years, presenting with CAP between April 2008 and March 2009. Using individual linkage of data from 2 cohorts, we studied a cohort of adolescents, and a cohort of children, presenting with CAP. Distance from home address to the closest ED in Ontario was used to describe distance to the closest ED. Time was measured as the difference between the actual arrival time and arrival time after 9:00 AM. Total LOS was defined as the total time spent in the ED until leaving, and total ED time was defined as total time spent in the ED until leaving. Descriptive statistics are reported as number (percentage) for categorical variables, and mean (SD) for continuous variables. Multiple regression models were used to assess the association between the distance to closest ED and total ED time, total time spent in the ED, and total LOS. A total of 12,229 adolescents with CAP and 73,552 children with CAP were included. For adolescents, distance to the closest ED had a significant influence on total ED time (P =.01) and total LOS (P =.04). For children, distance to the closest ED had no influence on total ED time (P =.36) or total LOS (P =.33). Distance to the closest ED was found to have no significant influence on total ED time, total LOS, or total time spent in the ED among adolescents and children with CAP presenting to the ED in Ontario, Canada. LOS was significantly influenced by distance to the closest ED in pediatric patients, but not in adolescent patients with CAP.Q: Did the Beatles ever make a song that was NOT commercially released and to whom was that song composed? The first half of what's believed to be a two-part interview from 2003 by the late Jeffrey Thomas with David Ray Jackson takes a look at the way Jackson had been approached by RCA/Atlantic Records by way of Rush producer Terry Brown, considering him as a possible lead singer/guitarist. (The other half of the interview is available via Google Videos.) Here's Part One: Note: At 3:30 into the interview, Thomas asks Jackson, "Are you gonna be the guy on the cover of the album?" At 5:00, he asks if "That's the way it's gonna be" and at 5:27 asks if "When's it gonna happen?" Here's Part Two (starting about 5:30): The above comes from an entry in the blog of Daniel N. Wilson (click the image for the full-sized version): "Most of the quotes that are out there, you can find interviews with him and with other people, where he says, 'David Jackson and I are the good guys and the band and Brian [Peak] and Geddy [Lee] were involved in these early collaborations' and all that. He's still coming out with interviews and videos and all that. He always says that David Jackson and I were the main guys and they just aren't as comfortable talking about that. That was his way of kind of justifying it. But you can come up with your own way of looking at it. 'I'm not gonna get into it. They wrote this song, it's my song, it's my band. They did, they do, they don't. And they're still out there being weird, but I'm not.' It's really all up to you. But as far as I'm concerned, he was the main guy."Q: What's the best amount of cpus to have for a UCL-eBunk? I have a Galaxy S5 with the Lollipop build that I'm running on.
