high resolution. We demonstrate the use of AFM for examining the self-assembly of membrane proteins as well as their interaction with membrane and protein anchors. A covalently linked bilayer of 1,2-dioleoyl-sn-glycero-3-phosphocholine (DOPC) was functionalized with 5-carboxy-fluorescein to facilitate imaging by atomic force microscopy

(AFM). When Alexa Fluor 633, a biotin-binding protein, was bound to streptavidin on the AFM tip, specific binding sites were identified at the surface of the lipid membrane. When Alexa Fluor 633 was bound to streptavidin previously immobilized on the tip, specific binding sites were also observed on the surface of the lipid membrane. The two-dimensional images were compared to images of the same membrane obtained using scanning electron microscopy (SEM). The AFM and SEM images were compared to identify the most probable binding sites on the membrane. The combination of AFM and SEM may be used to assemble protein-membrane complexes to mimic the interactions of membrane proteins in the cellular context.Q:

What might be wrong with the Google Recaptcha validation? I'm using Google recaptcha and I have a problem where I can't even get the validation to work. Right now I'm trying to validate the first method, non-native. My client can no longer use the native recaptcha so I'm trying to use a sample that I found online. My problem is, no matter what is
