no time to win, will you win your time or lose your time. Unfortunately, many people in this world have no time for friendship or family and only time for themselves. Too much time for themselves, too little time for others. If you have time to waste, then I would say that your life is in danger. The sooner you have time to do good to others, the better. If you have time to take action, then we are missing the last day that you can still win. This is the last day of the life that you will ever get, so what you do today, will determine what you will have tomorrow. . . . .

the “chirp” of a spotted and striped subspecies of lion, San Francisco Chronicle columnist T.C. Beattie reports. The lion chirp sounds different from the howl of a lioness, and it’s never been heard outside of Africa. In the Bay Area, it’s usually heard at night, in certain types of open habitat in the Central Valley, and it’s strongest near the coast, Beattie reports. If heard, officials will post the location on a website that park visitors can access. Conservationists have known for decades that mountain lion hunting for sport occurs in the San Francisco Bay Area, as well as surrounding counties, and many believe that hunting could be a threat to the spotted lion’s survival in the region. State parks officials have taken steps to protect spotted lions, including creating new passes for day use and limiting trophy hunting, according to The New York Times. Scott Kovacs, executive director of the California chapter of the Nature Conservancy, says that spotted lions need more protection than they receive in California, where they are declared a wildlife management species but don’t receive legal protection from hunting. “More than 90 percent of the spotted lion population in California is on private land, where they are exposed to threats from poaching and habitat loss,” he said in a statement. He added that the state’s lion population could be doubling every 25 years if the region’s spotted lion population is being properly managed. Spotted and striped lions have slightly different physical characteristics, though they are difficult to tell apart, The Times reported. But right now, it’s difficult to identify spotted lions in the Bay Area because they have been seen only a few times, said Oakland resident Doug
