Bulgaria equalized the match and went on to lose on penalty kicks, eliminating the host country from the Euro 2004. On the way home, the Romanian keeper filed a complaint to UEFA, and then started talking about it. He made these claims: – “I’ve seen a replay of the game, and there’s a lot of doubt about whether the Bulgarian goalkeeper had actually committed a foul.” – “The Bulgarian goalkeeper’s arm came down, but the ball just missed him, and the referee awarded the goal because a player moving to challenge for the ball looked suspiciously like he’d been fouled.” – “The goalie shouldn’t have been penalized because the Bulgarian striker was about 10 yards away from the ball when the foul was committed, and the ball simply kicked out of his reach.” The president of European football had been contacted by a member of the press office of Bulgaria’s national team; the press office had been sent a copy of the complaint, which they had scanned and sent to various journalists. It seemed that this was the first time he had ever heard about it. The lead news story of the evening on the television channel Duna told the public that a member of the Bulgarian national team had filed a complaint regarding a refereeing decision during the Euro 2004. But he had no idea who it was. So it came as a shock when the E.U. president (who is also the chairman of UEFA’s disciplinary panel and the lord of all Euro 2004 judges) later came out and said that he had received nothing from the Bulgarian national coach, who could not recall having ever filed a complaint over a refereeing decision. That is, until he saw the news report on the evening news. “I think this has all come about due to that Bulgarian goalkeeper being drunk at the time. He’s not to be pitied for that,” the president 648931e174

BoxSet (Hardback).Q: What is the origin of "to tilt at windmills"? To tilt at windmills is to indulge in fruitless or pointless arguments. Etymology Online, "to tilt at", fruitless or pointless, argue, battle, contest, war. Example 1 "One of the most profound sign that the Winter Olympics of Pyeongchang are about to begin is a handful of Korean television viewers who appear to be finding "tilt at windmills" to be a tautology." Example 2 "In 2015, a so-called "nuclear debate," or the battle over a possible resumption of nuclear weapons, was raging with the South threatening to withdraw from the talks unless the North complied with all five of the agreements the two Koreas had reached in 2007.... About a year and a half after the North announced its nuclear program in June 2009, both sides agreed to hold talks "without preconditions."... And then the tensions rose in 2010, and in June 2011, North Korea began to hint that the historic agreements might be at risk.... At a November 2011 news conference, North Korea's Kim Yo Jong repeated what had become a familiar litany of North Korean grievances against the U.S. and South Korea, putting the blame for any future crises on those two countries. She said, "We will discuss the problems arising in the Korean Peninsula from the standpoint of the development of the economy and politics as a jjangbaegi (meaning a reshuffle of history)." And she added, "It is a difficult decision for us
