To open an image in Photoshop, first save it as an image file by choosing File⇒Save (or clicking the File menu and then choosing Save from the menu). Photoshop saves your files in the PSD (Photoshop Document) format, which is an extension of the TIFF file format. Images can be saved as a compressed version of the PSD or as a plain, uncompressed TIFF. The number of layers in your image determine whether it's compressed or uncompressed. You don't need to save images as PSD files—you can access files in other formats if needed. However, keep in mind that you save in a way that conforms to the file format. Save in Photoshop by selecting File⇒Save and then choosing the format you want. If you want to save your image as a JPEG, for example, choose File⇒Save As and select JPEG from the menu. Choose a file name and folder location for the image, and Photoshop saves the file with the file extension.jpg. You can then open the JPEG file in any image-editing application to add or edit your image, such as Adobe's Fireworks. When you save an image in Photoshop, you can optionally save its export settings so that it produces a printed JPEG or high-quality TIFF. Most image-editing software comes with such settings, but in Photoshop you don't have to save anything: When you save, you get a default selection of settings that lets you print the image or save it as a high-quality TIFF (or JPEG). Figure 17-3 shows an example of this. Figure 17-3: When you save in Photoshop, you automatically get a number of printer-optimization settings. After you save an image in Photoshop, it's important to know that you don't have to save your image for any special purpose; you can use Photoshop to create any image that you want. Then if you like the image you just created, you can save the file with a more specific purpose in mind. Photoshop is an application that requires training and practice to fully master. Reducing intraneural scarring after end-to-end repair of long nerve gaps with autologous tissue transfer in rabbits. To study the effect of the removal of intraneural scar on the length of nerve regeneration after end-to-end repair in rabbits. Bilateral sural nerves were sectioned at a distance of 10 mm in 5 rabbits. In each rabbit, the proximal stump was repaired end-to-end to a silicone sheet and then to the distal stump. The proximal segment was incised in the epineurium in a random order in 1 group of rabbits, removing only the epineurium (group I). In the other group (group II), the scar was removed completely by resection. The nerves were studied by intraoperative microscopic and light microscopic evaluation. Intraneural regeneration of the proximal segment was complete in both groups at 6 weeks, but there was a significant (P , even though the overall impact of the motorcycle safety law on motorcycle fatalities has been fairly modest, these results indicate that in the state of New Mexico, the law has led to a substantial decrease in fatalities involving motorcycle occupants as a passenger or operator. We think, however, that the strong effects observed in our models will be muted if other states introduce similar changes and thus the overall impact on national motorcycle fatality rates will not be dramatic. What's New in the?

For the first time in Canada, a federal environmental minister has failed to show up for a court hearing as the case continues against the former Alberta minister. Environment and Climate Change Minister Catherine McKenna was scheduled to appear at a hearing Friday in Edmonton, but her lawyer said she was too busy and did not say what else she would be attending to. A judge issued an injunction against former Alberta Environment Minister Diana McQueen and her staff last November as a result of a B.C. Supreme Court ruling that found they had misled the public and destroyed government documents in a crackdown against a local environmental protest group. Story continues below advertisement The injunction prohibits the minister and her staff from speaking publicly about the case, as McQueen and her staff have been doing since the case began. It also bars them from acting in concert with anyone else to discuss the matter in Alberta. McGill University professor Andy Stephenson, who has been monitoring court filings in the case, has been keeping tabs on McKenna's appearances before the injunction takes effect. He said the federal minister was due in court because she is a party to the case and represents the federal government. McKenna's lawyer said she was too busy to appear at the hearing and argued in court documents that the injunction should be stayed until she can get approval to speak about her client's case. The judge denied the request to stay the injunction during a hearing Friday morning. McKenna has long said she was not privy to government emails or documents pertaining to the takeover of a B.C. company led by McQueen in 2013. McQueen and her staff are now being held in contempt of court and can be fined up to $1,000 a day for refusing to comply with the injunction. The injunction was issued by the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench. Story continues below advertisement McQueen is suspended from the PCs, but recently re-registered as an independent candidate for Calgary-McCall in the federal election next month. FILED
