Ingestion of starch improves de novo lipogenesis in humans. Starch is an important energy source in the human diet, however, the metabolic effects of starch in humans are not completely understood. Here we evaluated the effect of starch, wheat starch and a polysaccharide-containing food on de novo lipogenesis in humans. Six healthy subjects were fed 4 g/kg body weight starch (total starch intake = 23 g/meal) for 6 wk in a randomized, crossover design. Subjects had a low- and high-carbohydrate, low-fat diet during the first and second 4 wk of starch feeding. Respiration quotient, the area under the curve of 2-h plasma insulin levels, and the area under the curve of insulin-like growth factor-1 levels during an oral glucose tolerance test were not significantly different before and after the starch feeding. After starch feeding, the endogenous nonoxidative and oxidative de novo lipogenesis from fatty acids were increased by 13% and 30%, respectively. These results indicate that starch promotes nonoxidative and oxidative de novo lipogenesis from fatty acids in humans.FORT WORTH — Four months after an in-home shooting claimed the life of her husband, Darlene Opinione, now 54, and three-year-old son, Jimmy, were forced to leave their Fort Worth home. Next month, Opinione will relocate her family — including a 3-year-old daughter she had with her ex-husband — to North Carolina to reunite with her parents. "They told us to go back where we came from," Opinione said Friday from a North Carolina rehab center. "But that's not my home. I'm not going back to Texas." She will rejoin her three adult children there — in Lumberton, N.C. — once she's on her feet. Opinione believes she was shot and wounded by her ex-husband, Patrice Opinione — who authorities say committed suicide in the evening hours of Nov. 23. But that's a story that remains unclear.
