A: This is most likely caused by the fact that the USB drive/pen drive you are installing the software on is incompatible with the software and/or device. First thing you should try is to take out the USB storage device from the laptop or computer and try installing the software on a different USB storage device. If it still fails, we will need some more details: Please provide: The model of the laptop or computer The operating system on the laptop or computer The OS of the USB storage device The laptop model The laptop manufacturer, model, and version Whether the laptop has a Thunderbolt port The Operating System Version of the USB storage device The Operating System Version of the laptop or computer Due to the fact that this is a laptop model, it is highly likely that the laptop/computer has Windows 10 pre-installed and you can check this by launching the Device Manager and checking the version number of the device. In case the OS Version on the USB storage device is lower than the OS Version of the laptop/computer, the installation will fail with an error message. If you have Windows 10 Home, you can check the version of Windows 10 Home by opening the Windows Start Menu and typing Windows 10 Home Version. The same principle applies for Windows 10 Pro. You can also check in the device manager if the USB storage device is an 2.5" USB 3.0 flash drive or a USB 2.0 flash drive. Both are compatible with the laptop/computer. However, if the USB storage device is a USB 3.0 flash drive, you will need a suitable USB 3.0 port. If that is a USB 3.0 port built-in to the laptop/computer, than you will need a USB 3.0 port in the USB port of the laptop/computer. If that is not a USB 3.0 port built-in to the laptop/computer, you will need a USB 3.0 port that is capable of high data transfer rates, depending on the performance of your USB 3.0 port (USB 3.0 ports are currently limited to transfer data up to 5

Volunteers in white jackets and hats lined up alongside the officers before a meeting in Rome on Wednesday night, forming a concrete barrier of sorts against the torrent of migrants. "I'm here because I hope they will allow me to help," said Vasila Bogdava, 28. "I've come out of curiosity." The volunteer camp sprang up after Matteo Salvini, a deputy prime minister and the head of the right-wing League party, announced Tuesday that his government would set up an "internal border" with neighboring countries, and would enforce Italy's sovereignty. He was referring to the reception centers under Italian and European control for migrants rescued in the Mediterranean. Volunteers' union organizer Matteo Pinto told The Associated Press his group counted 2,000 people volunteering and expects the number to swell by the day. The group is planning to set up camps across Italy, he said. "We've kept it under wraps as long as possible, but it's necessary for the safety of the volunteers to have confidence that they are going to be safe," Pinto said. "This is not an easy decision, but we hope the authorities take care of us." The volunteers organized in the center in Piazzale Imperiale in Rome at the behest of Federico Murate, head of the Rome chapter of the Umanita Nova movement, a
