Yesterday, the first sign of the new release was found in Apple's app store. In addition to the usual bloatware apps like Apple Music, Apple News, Apple Pay, and others, there is one app that isn't entirely surprising. Kids. Kids is a new photo, video, and app store app for kids. While features like this are a first for the iOS App Store, it is not surprising that Apple, given the massive exposure of the iPhone and iPad, is launching a kids application first. Some of the screenshots that were released today indicate that there are going to be some new features to the app. There is even a feature that allows parents to set rules for when their kids can use the app. While this app is likely just a placeholder and not the final one, it does look like a promising app for kids. While this is just a placeholder, the app looks like it is going to be light on restrictions and allow kids to easily access all the apps that are available on Apple's App Store. The Kids app is an interesting one for Apple. While the company has always been fairly secretive, there is the expectation that Apple might allow developers to build apps for its devices and would make them available in a quick time. This move, if successful, could be a significant leap in being less secretive. Apple has a significant amount of market share and could easily build an app store with apps that appeal to all ages. The question then becomes Macquarie Group Ginni Rometty is also president and CEO of IBM, but will return to her job at IBM on November 20. Rometty's announcement follows the departures of Scott McNealy and Mark Hurd last month. McNealy, the former head of Apple Computer, resigned in January, while Hurd, the former CEO of Oracle, was ousted from that company in April. The moves were made in the wake of massive layoffs at both firms, including the cancellation of 14,000 layoffs at Oracle.A Jefferson County sheriff's deputy was gunned down while responding to a burglary call Saturday afternoon. Around 2:30 p.m. deputies were dispatched to an address in the 6200 block of Kirkwood Circle in the city of Homestead after receiving a call about a burglary suspect, according to the Homestead Police Department.
